

Advanced Supervisory Series...

Supervisors as Case Consultants

With Matthew Modrcin, LCSW, MSW, Ph.D.

Supervision is often an overlooked aspect of profession development and training. Supervisors often emerge through the ranks in an organizational structure. They are often trained to address human resource issues, accountability related to job performance, and how to manage employees who are having difficulties managing job expectations. This workshop will address supervision as an educational-teaching process that develops the skills of the worker to better meet the needs of their clients, and the client change to meet the goals that they have established for themselves. A framework for supervision that is clinical in nature will be presented. Supervision strategies that focus on ten-minute consultations with their workers will be discussed. Recognizing teachable moments, and identifying and working with the parallel process associated with the work will be articulated. This workshop is designed to be interactive, so please bring your questions, concerns, and specific supervision issues that you want to discuss.

Objectives:

- Articulate the differences between case and clinical supervision;
- Identify the elements associated with clinical supervision;
- Discuss the relationship between good supervision, and staff development and retention;
- Identify three factors associated with teachable moments;
- List and articulate four strategies related to case consultation;
- Identify the parallel process as it emerges in the dialogue with their workers; and
- Discuss the power of questions as a supervision strategy.
